Report shows need for psychological services

LIVERMORE — Helping out the victims of suicide, depression and drug overdoses is a fine idea — as long as it doesn't cost us money.

That was the general attitude of Valley Memorial Hospital board members toward a project local mental health people have been trying to push for years: readily available psychological help for people who would otherwise be shuttled off to Highland Hospital in Oakland — the nearest psychiatric facility — or sent back home without any attention at all.

For the second time in the past several years, a big community task force has made a report showing there's a serious need for some kind of psychological help to be close at hand for cases that end up in Valley Memorial Hospital's emergency room.

Those cases are hard to count, psychiatrist Grant Syphers explained to the VMH board at their Thursday night meeting.

Sometimes somebody comes to the hospital with a physical complaint that's only an excuse for an underlying mental crisis. Other times, they arrive with slashed wrists, or unconscious from drug overdoses. Those are the obvious ones.

Then there are the violent ones who end up in a police cell when they really should be in a doctor's office.

The suicide rate for the Valley is more than twice as high as the rate for Alameda County on the whole and a bit higher than the national average, according to the task force's statistics. The Valley rate is 14 suicides per 100,000 population (or about one successful suicide a month) while in Alameda County, the rate is six per 100,000 and nationally 12.

"That is only reported, successful suicides," Dr. Syphers emphasized. "How many more are unsuccessful attempts, or unreported suicides? The number may be 50 or 100 times as great."

According to the picture painted by Syphers, and by mental health consultant Frank Mele, the approach to such problems in the Valley is a patchwork one. Private physicians sometimes put their patients, heavily tranquilized, into VMH and call in a psychiatrist for consultation.

There are many agencies that offer counseling, and there are telephone crisis lines manned by volunteers to handle people reaching out for some support.

What the task force report proposes is training all VMH emergency room staff, from the telephone operator to nurses and doctors, to recognize and handle psychiatric emergencies.

Also, the report suggests that a psychiatrist, psychologist or psychiatric social worker always be on call. The professional could be called into the emergency room on short notice to talk with the patient and even prescribe medication.

Task Force members (which included two judges, two policemen, two ministers, six mental health workers, a former VMH board member and a physician) reportedly all agreed on the need for such a service and so did emergency-room staff who were asked for their opinions.

VMH administrator Tom Andrews told board members training the Emergency Room staff in psychiatric techniques wouldn't cost anything, since in-service training is already part of the hospital program.

The county might pay the fee of an expert to come in and do the training.

Andrews also warned board members that getting the hospital into a mental health program could just be the "tip of the iceberg" as more and more needs could crop up.

VMH director Ted Fairfield advanced the "little learning is a dangerous thing" theory, questioning whether a nurse or doctor with a short course in psychiatry were really qualified to handle a mental case. Syphers responded that suicides and depressions are already being handled informally at the hospital, but not on an organized basis.

Then there was the question of money. Consultant Mele admitted he hadn't tried to figure out the amount of money it would take to pay an on-call panel of psychologists but a rough guess would be some $40,000 a year.

The money-conscious VMH board has been trying to hang onto their $335,000 surplus to pay off the second hospital they're building in Pleasanton, and times have not been good. So they weren't happy to hear there could be some expenditure of money involved.

With a promise by administrator Andrews to do a feasibility study, the board after an hour's discussion accepted the report and put off a decision on whether or not to offer the proposed services.

Jerry Harper of the English Center teaches English to Vietnamese children: Ha, Hang, Tui and Tri Tran.

Valley Vietnamese refugees need language learning aid

You're a refugee in a strange land with odd food, different-looking people and an impossible language.

When you go out of the house, you can't even tell whether the next-door neighbor is saying to you, "Good morning" or "Watch out for that car."

Although you're well educated, you can't read the signs, much less the labels on cans or the job ads in the newspaper.

Dozens of Vietnamese refugees are now going through that miserable experience in the Valley. And concerned volunteers are needed to help them learn the language as soon as possible.

Lending a hand is the Valley Christian Center School of Literacy in Dublin, and its affiliated Living English Center in Livermore.

The two centers, directed by Sally Dilgard of Livermore, offer a fast-moving and simple method of learning English, the Laubach textbook-and-pictures method used the world over.

"You don't have to know the other person's language to teach them English with the Laubach method," Mrs. Dilgard explains. "You don't have to be a teacher, either. Everything is spelled out for you."

Tutors and their students (there's one tutor per student) meet at the Livermore or Dublin center for lessons in the morning or evening. Babysitting is available.

Anyone 16 or over can become a good tutor, Mrs. Dilgard says — and many of the younger tutors are assigned students of their own age so a companionable bond builds up to enhance the teacher-student relationship.

A Vietnamese family of eight, the Trans, are being tutored in Livermore by Living English Center volunteer Jerry Harper. There are more refugees in need of instruction, and still more arrivals are expected soon.

Although the English tutoring program is primarily for adults, an exception is being made this summer "because of the urgency of the situation; we want the children to be able to speak English by the time school starts, so they won't get too far behind," Mrs. Dilgard explains.

So you want to volunteer; what does it take? Nineteen dollars, for one thing; $10 to cover the cost of a 30-hour course in how to use the Laubach Method, and $9 for textbooks.

It also takes three hours of your time, 7-10 p.m., on Mondays and Wednesdays for five weeks beginning this Monday night, July 28.

After about three weeks of training you'll be able to start tutoring.

The tutor training, led by Mrs. Dilgard, takes place at the Valley Christian Center, 7400 San Ramon Road, Dublin. She may be contacted at home (447-2685) for more information.

She emphasizes, "No special educational background is required. We're looking for anyone who reads and writes English and has compassion for other people."

Refugee signups urged by schools

LIVERMORE — Vietnamese refugee families living in the Livermore Valley Unified School District area are urged to register their school-age children with the district next week.

A survey form designed to speed registration procedures may be obtained from the Education Center, 685 Las Positas Blvd., (447-9500.) The form will request name, age, sex and language background of school-age children and adults.

The school district's Pupil Services Division at the same number is in charge of the registration during the hours of 8:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. beginning July 28.

Dick Jenkins, director of pupil services, stressed the importance of early registration so the district can determine how many Vietnamese children to prepare for in the fall.

Decision not final

VCSD director bowing out?

Ann Jolley, a Valley Community Services District board member for eight years, revealed yesterday that she will not seek reelection in November.

"As of now, barring some unforeseen event, I am not considering running," said Jolley. "There's no feeling of being fed up with it, it's just giving someone else a chance."

Jolley, Dick Fahey and Chuck Ladner will all see their terms expire this year. Ladner, who just won an off-year election to earn his seat on the board, has indicated that he will definitely run again in the fall.

VCSD President Lila Euler and Vice-President Ron Hyde both do not have to go before the voters this year.

Jolley does not completely rule out the possibility of a third term, however. Events could make her feel that she should run again — "That's why I'm not saying emphatically no at this time," Jolley cautioned.

It is unlikely that she will take an active part in the campaigning should she decide to step down. "Naturally I'll be interested in who takes my place," she said, but she indicated that if she doesn't run, she will not put a lot of effort in someone else's campaign.

Her eight-year term spanned some of the most traumatic and important moments in VCSD history.

Perhaps the most stunning was "mystery million gallons", which forced VCSD to stop selling sewer permits.

The VCSD plant was thought to be running one million gallons a day less than it actually was, but when accurate measurements were taken, the extra million suddenly appeared, causing many problems that are still being worked out in court.

"I do think that possibly we weren't prepared for it," said Jolley. "We had been lulled into a false sense of security."

"If we knew then what we know now, we would have watched it more carefully," Jolley added, but concluded that the legal problems probably would have resulted anyway.

One of the achievements that she is most proud of was VCSD's successful push to get a Parks Dedication Act passed in both Alameda and Contra Costa Counties.

The ordinance requires that a developer dedicate some portion of his property for parks and recreation, or at least donate funds if a park is impractical.

Jolley added that the confines of the duties of the board were "limited" and mainly involved administration, so major land use decisions could not be made.

In the future, Jolley feels that incorporation drives in both counties could radically alter VCSD's boundaries and duties.

However, after eight long years of meritorious service, that is one problem Ann Jolley won't have to deal with.

Council weighs worth of COVA

PLEASANTON — Once again, the city council will consider its participation in the Congress of Valley Agencies Monday night.

Several council members have indicated they would like the city to withdraw from that valleywide group because of COVA's insistence on delving into land use matters within municipal jurisdictions.

COVA's request to review the city's regional shopping center plans precipitated the controversy two months ago. The council refused to present those plans for review, claiming that type of land use matter was not within COVA's jurisdiction.

Rather than pull out of COVA, the council may insist on substantial changes in that agency's by-laws and the joint powers agreement which established COVA.

The council will also consider a request from Dr. Edward Schlies for enough sewer connections to the Sunol Boulevard treatment plant to hook up a medical office facility on Mohr Avenue.

That facility is currently being serviced through an expensive holding tank.

Although the council has reserved some 16 permits for commercial and industrial development, Schlies' facility is planned to be serviced into the Valley Community Services District plant, not the city's Sunol Boulevard facility.

The staff report lists a number of alternatives, ranging from granting Schlies sufficient permits at Sunol to denying those permits and forcing him to continue on the holding tank until a line is completed sometime in the future to hook the facility up to the VCSD plant.

The council is expected to approve an application for $107,000 in county gas tax appropriations. The city plans to begin three projects with those funds: a traffic signal at Hopyard Road and Johnson Industrial Drive, intersection improvements and a signal at Valley Avenue and Santa Rita Road and a bridge over the Arroyo Mochio.

The council will also consider a request from the Recreation Department to hang a banner from the Main Street Pleasanton sign advertising the production of "The King and I."

The council will meet at 8 p.m. Monday in the Pleasanton Justice Court, 30 West Angela St. An executive session dealing with labor relations has been scheduled for 7:30 p.m.

Veteran Valley Community Services District Director Ann Jolley says she will not seek reelection to the board in November. She is stepping down "to give someone else a chance."

Heat closes parks

East Bay Regional Parks District has temporarily closed Del Valle Regional Park and the Sunol Wilderness facility because of extremely high temperatures and dry conditions. The fire hazards are extreme, according to parks district spokesman Monte Montegale. Forecasts for cooler weather in the immediate future may reopen the facilities.

Inflation reflected in low-cost housing rents

LIVERMORE — Although the comparatively steep rents at the "low-cost" Livermore Gardens complex came as a surprise to the community, the prices basically are those proposed from the start.

Livermore Gardens, or Livermore Townhouse apartments, 5720 East Avenue, offers two-bedroom apartments to qualified low-income families beginning at $189; three-bedroom apartments, $218, and four-bedroom, $247.

"The rents are roughly the same as when the project was first proposed," according to Dirk Murphy, special assistant to the director of the San Francisco area office of the federal Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD).

The 96-unit complex was built under Section 236 of the National Housing Act, administered by HUD and the Federal Housing Authority (FHA).

Owners of the Livermore Gardens are Goldrich & Kest, Hirsch & Stern. Developer is Goldrich & Kest, Inc.

The Section 236 program provides both mortgage insurance and an interest subsidy on privately-owned projects as a way to provide reduced rentals for low and moderate income families, explained Murphy.

The subsidy reduces the interest the project owner must pay on his mortgage loan from the market rate to only 3 per cent, Murphy said.

"In other words, HUD, or the FHA, makes up the difference of what the bank is charging the owner for the mortgage loan and a 3 per cent rate. The sponsor, in turn, must lower the rents for families that qualify — low and moderate income families," he explained.

Under this program, a family of two can earn up to $9,400 annually to qualify for the base rent at Livermore Gardens; family of three or four, $11,050, and family of five or six, $12,750.

Inflation is the cause of the high rents at the Livermore Gardens, said Murphy.

"It's really just a function of the rather steep inflation in building costs over the last three or four years. It costs a great deal more to build a multi-family building this year than three, four years ago. Those costs are reflected in the rents," he pointed out.

Murphy admitted there have been "significant" problems with Section 236 and the program has been terminated nationally. Instead, HUD has changed to Section 8, an allowance program that directly subsidizes a family rather than a building or project.

"Under Section 8 HUD will make up the difference between what a low to moderate income family can afford to pay for rent and what the fair market rental of the unit is," Murphy explained. "The subsidy goes with the family and not the unit."

Families that receive housing assistance payments under Section 8 are required to pay at least 15 per cent of their income for rent, but not more than 25 per cent, he said.

Despite its problems, Murphy defended Section 236 programs.

"There are thousands of families living happily in Section 236 projects and probably in better circumstances than they would be able to afford otherwise," he noted.

Examples of Section 236 problems offered by Murphy are tight financing and little allowance for inflation in production and operating costs.

"The department feels a housing allowance is a superior approach. Buildings over the past few years have gotten very expensive to build and even a subsidy situation can produce rents that are fairly steep," he said.

In the case of Livermore Gardens — as well as all other Section 236 projects — the main criteria for rents is to make sure they will be sufficient to pay off the mortgage and operate the project, Murphy pointed out.

"There's a formula market rent calculated and that is the amount of rent that would be required to service the mortgage and operate the project. From that formula market rent, we determine what we call the basic rent could be by applying the interest subsidy; putting the interest down to 3 per cent."

"The basic rent becomes the effective economic rent charged to the tenants," he explained.

Livermore Gardens has as its sole allowed occupants resident managers Betty and David Williams. According to Mrs. Williams, they have been accepting rental applications.

The developer is scheduled to appear at the city council meeting Monday night to request that occupancy be allowed prior to the city's acceptance of final completion plans.

Only some landscaping remains to be completed, according to a city staff report.

Valley Memorial Hospital: Growing pains begin

Livermore police arrest attempted rape suspect

LIVERMORE - Local police arrested a transient press operator Thursday on charges of attempting to rape a Valley Memorial Hospital employee he allegedly lured into the hospital's parking lot July 10.

Following a "a long series of stake-outs at suspected locations," Livermore Detective Jim Serna arrested Joseph A. Canales, 30, at the Amador Street, Hayward, offices of the California Department of Employment Development.

Canales was arrested on a warrant issued Monday by Judge John A. Lewis, and was arraigned Friday on charges of assault with attempt to rape.

He was arrested through information supplied by "a series of contacts and information obtained from citizens," Serna said, adding Canales has no known prior arrests.

A VMH employee told police a man pretending to be deaf and dumb lured her into the parking lot shortly before 4 a.m. on the pretext of helping someone in a car. The woman followed him until he grabbed her by the throat and dragged her, screaming and fighting, through the lot.

"Don't scream or I'll hurt you," he purportedly said.

A Tri-Valley ambulance approaching the hospital with sirens at full blast scared off the assailant.

Canales was identified from an old photo, police said. He is being held at Santa Rita jail on $6,000 bail.

Rate hike voted

VMH planning for future

LIVERMORE - Despite big setbacks, Valley Memorial Hospital directors are struggling ahead with their plans to expand medical services for Valley residents from Sunol to Danville.

Proponents call it an efficient plan to deliver good medical care. Whatever it's called, it is going to happen if nine dogged VMH directors can make it happen by adapting their tactics to the changing situation.

At their Thursday night meeting, directors agreed to a new rate increase which would raise the rate for a semi-private room by $8, to $109 a day. That compares with $110 at Washington Hospital in Fremont, $116 at St. Rose (Hayward), $107 at Eden (Castro Valley) and $125 at San Leandro.

The hospital's other rates went up correspondingly. Adjustments in the rates are managing to keep the hospital's surplus where it must be in order to finance the new hospital which should be opening in Pleasanton about 1980.

VMH's budgeted surplus for the year is $335,000. The hospital's occupancy rate has been down this spring and summer, especially during the doctors' walkout over malpractice insurance. The drop would normally result in less revenue, but the surplus is expected to be achieved through rate raises, directors learned.

In addition, an agreement between VMH and four other Bay Area hospitals is cutting expenses by the tens of thousands of dollars.

Besides paying for the new Pleasanton medical center, the hospital's revenues are carrying the Family Health Care Center in San Ramon.

The center has its own set of problems. It opened in February, 1974, and was expected to be breaking even by now but, as reported by VMH board member James Merritt, "We lost $13,000 in the magnificent month of June."

The center was planned to be the first of four, the others opening in future years in Livermore, Sunol and Pleasanton. The idea was to build up a supply of doctors in the Valley to stop prospective hospital patients from going far afield to Hayward and Walnut Creek as they are wont to do now.

Going to a local doctor will mean using a local hospital when the time comes, the reasoning goes.

However, the unforeseen economic decline has put an odd wrinkle in that plan. According to Dr. Claude Burdick, who is in charge of the VMH labs and also heads the physicians' corporation serving the Health Care Center, doctors these days just want to stay on the Health Care Center staff. They don't want to go into private practice in the Valley.

"I'm less hopeful that these people are going to break loose and go into the community than I was two years ago," Burdick explained. "Costs are rising and revenues are about the same for doctors." He added paperwork from government and private insurance plans was more than some doctors could cope with.

So what VMH chiefs have on their hands is a large number of well qualified MD's who want to work at the San Ramon facility but who won't, as had been hoped, go into private practice in the West Valley once they develop a clientele.

Just the reverse, in one case. Dr. Burdick is negotiating with one local private practitioner who may join the center, bringing, it is hoped, his "rather active practice" with him.

Dr. Burdick's plan for giving the Health Care Center some new life is to put at least two full-time MD's on the staff instead of the one there now. "We're aiming for a break-even year," he told the board at their Thursday night meeting.

Director Art Henry cautioned against the hospital's "getting into private practice" in the Valley by running a giant doctor's office. Burdick responded that he understood the problem and didn't want to talk about philosophy. He promised the new plan would attract specialists to the Valley. "If we have three internists on our staff, we'll have to beat away the surgeons with a stick."

Another point, brought up by board member Merritt, was the center's name. Too similar to the title of the older Pleasanton Health Care Center, a county-funded low-income clinic. "When the Pleasanton center opened," quipped Merritt, "I thought it was ours."

A suggestion from the center's advisory board was to drop the word "Care" and simply make it "Family Health Center."

Merritt's own suggestion, supported by other directors, was to put the phrase "VMH" or "Valley Memorial Hospital" into the title somewhere, to clarify the center's connection with the hospital.

The Family Health Care Center is about 10,000 square feet in size, or seven times the size of a well-appointed specialist's office. It offers a large array of medical services, including facilities for setting broken bones, taking X-rays, doing lab work on the spot, and treating chronic and emergency ailments.

Livermore fire scene

A midnight fire at 1055 Nielsen Lane ravaged the Robert Alfrey home, Thursday, causing an estimated $17,000 in structural damage. The fire apparently started in the attic, according to officials, and gutted the second floor before brought under control. Firemen could see the blaze from Livermore High School, nearly a mile away, and when they arrived found flames leaping "30 to 40 feet" into the moon emboldened sky. Three engine companies and 25 to 30 firemen responded to the blaze, returning shortly before 6 a.m. The Alfrey family was out for the evening. No injuries were reported, and the cause of the fire is under investigation.

Motorcycle popularity grows

Injury accidents climb faster than California registrations

First of a two-part series

California's 700,000 motorcycles account for about 4 per cent of the motor vehicles on the road, yet are involved in 10 per cent of the accidents, according to the California Office of Traffic Safety.

Statewide statistics show that 532 motorcyclists were killed and 20,887 injured in California last year, an increase of 9.5 per cent over 1973. Registration for cycles increased only 6.5 per cent during the same period.

Yet most officials don't feel the higher accident percentage is linked to a poorer driving ability on the cyclist's part, but instead to a combination of visibility, size difference, and the level of consciousness of both cyclist and car driver.

"It's mainly lack of visibility — the car driver usually says after the accident that he just didn't see the cyclist," said Captain Ronald Nelson of the Pleasanton Police Dept.

"Motorcyclists have a tendency to try to go where others can't, such as passing on the shoulder or between the dividing line and the car. Maybe they forget they're sitting on that cycle with nothing around them," Nelson said.

Cycle clubs generally endorse daylight headlight usage to stand out in traffic, but this policy is not law. In fact, no studies have been done to determine if this policy should be recommended to legislators for adoption into state law, according to Robert Bieber, commander of the analysis section of the California Highway Patrol.

"I don't even think there is any recommended policy, but I know some of the clubs urge it," Bieber said.

Bieber feels that if the motorcyclists are the only ones on the road with their lights on, it is a definite safety feature. "But it's never been shown to have an effect when everyone has their lights on," he said.

The state periodically conducts tests in which motorists are requested to turn their headlights on during the day for a certain strip of highway, but none have been instituted for cyclists only, Bieber said. He added that safety is not significantly improved for any vehicles under these circumstances.

Sidelights for cycles would not necessarily increase visibility, Bieber says, because "a cycle is not an intersection problem, but a head-on one."

The State Office of Traffic Safety (OTS) urges cyclists to turn their headlights on at all times and wear bright clothing while riding.

The OTS says that most injuries to cyclists in accidents are head wounds, and federal guidelines require states to legislate mandatory helmet usage laws.

But California is one of several states electing not to enact such a law, and faces the possible loss of $1.2 million in federal revenue for failing to act.

State legislators indicate they are worried about the constitutionality of a law that forces a person to protect himself. Bieber says, however, that a recent court decision involving an Iowa man rejecting his claim of unconstitutionality removes any legal entanglements in a law requiring helmets for cyclists.

Barbara Bania, planning coordinator for the OTS, said that in eight attempts in seven years, legislators have failed to pass a mandatory helmet law because the majority felt it should be an individual decision.

"Seventy per cent of fatalities in accidents involving motorcycles are the result of head injuries," said Bania. States requiring motorcyclists to wear helmets report a drop in fatalities of up to one-third, she said.

"One death occurs for every 41 motorcyclists injured, while only one death per 65 automobile occupants injured occurs," Bania said.

Only 15-25 per cent of motorcyclists wear helmets, she said, but "approximately 50 per cent more would wear them if they were required."

Ed Joseph, also a planner for the OTS, said that most motorcycle dealers actively promote the use of helmets, even to the point of selling them at cost with the purchase of a cycle.

"The use of helmets is in direct relation to age — the older the new cycle owner is, the more likely he is to buy and use a helmet," he said.

"It comes down to this — if you have something protecting your head, it keeps it from being split open in an accident," Joseph concluded.

Dairy is Dutch man's pride

Bert Serne, owner of Dutch Pride Dairy on Amador Valley Blvd., in Dublin, still carries the reflection of the North Sea that surrounds his native Holland, in his electric, azure-blue eyes. Eyes that are constantly smiling back at you as he tells of his family's migration into the United States.

Seeing Bert and his wife, Ria, so totally at ease, sitting next to their pool at their lovely home in San Ramon, it was hard to imagine that barely fourteen years ago neither one of them could speak a word of English.

It was in January of 1961 that they came to Stockton, Calif., from Amsterdam, parents of two small daughters, Helma 6, and Marian, 4, under the sponsorship of Jan Warmerdam, as associate of the owner of the Dutch Pride Dairies, Mr. C. Van Wyk.

The original Dutch Pride Ranch still exists in Escalon, Calif., still operated exclusively by Dutch people. Mr. Van Wyk has retained control of all Dutch Pride Franchises. Himself a fifty year resident of the United States, he is now a proud U.S. citizen.

The one greatest hurdle that Bert Serne remembers in coming here is the language barrier. His inability to speak English did not deter his new boss to immediately place him in the position of waiting on customers. He was forced to learn English quickly. He remembers trying to learn from the TV set, but complained that everyone spoke too fast.

He stayed in the Stockton area eight months, just long enough for their first genuine U.S. citizen child to be born, and they gratefully called her "Joy".

They were sent to work by the same company to Concord, Calif., and it was here that their youngest son, Richard, was born.

In 1968 Bert felt he was ready to strike out on his own, and ambitiously took over the newly built Dublin franchise of Dutch Pride Dairy. Settling on a home in San Ramon, it wasn't long before he was totally involved with his new community.

Besides working endless hours at the Dairy, he found time to help with ushering duties at St. Raymond's Catholic Church. He has also helped to coach the soccer team with which his son Richard is involved.

Having already experienced a measure of success by 1970, Bert and Ria decided to take the whole family back to Holland on a vacation. It was really to show off their two new U.S. citizens, but they're glad they went when they did, because both of their mother's died in the succeeding years of 1973 and 1974.

On this return trip, they found the people in Holland living a completely different style of life than they had remembered. Money was more plentiful and life seemed to be easier. But, because of a new affluence, cars were more plentiful, and "traffic was murder."

They were happy to return to their home in San Ramon, where the open space sprawls around you, in contrast to their native Holland, where "the towns and villages are back to back and every inch of available space is used for agriculture."

Dutch Pride Dairy not only carries dairy products of all kinds, but also bread, cookies, cigarettes, breakfast rolls, donuts, beer, etc. and etc. At first this was a convenience to his customer's, but with the advent of a variety of super markets opening in Dublin, his business noted a definite slump period.

1970 became a crucial year for the Serne's. As a counter measure, he decided to install gas pumps at the Dairy entrance in addition to all of their other products. It turned out to be a very wise decision.

People in Dublin still remember the long lines of cars waiting for gas at the Dairy pumps, during the recent gas crises.

Since Bert was able to get as much gas as the larger stations, the constant use of the pumps helped his business to survive.

You can still go there and fill up on gas while ordering your chocolate milk and eggs.

Owner's eyes reflect his native Holland

April, 1972 is also memorable to Bert and Ria Serne, because it was at this time that they became citizens of the United States. They were proud to lend their allegiance to the country that had welcomed them so openly and was able to give them and their children such a wonderful living. They both say they have always been very happy that they settled here and in the San Ramon Valley especially.

They still keep in close contact with their Dutch friends through the East Bay Holland Club which offers, not only social activity, but discounted tours to Holland.

While interviewing the family, it was a delight to meet their two summer houseguests, Bert's attractive sister, Gertrude Serne, and Ria's cousin, Helena Walker.

Ms. Walker, a language teacher in the schools in Amsterdam spoke English flawlessly, as well as French, German and Spanish. It was her first trip to the United States. They came into the Los Angeles Airport, so the Serne's immediately took them to Disneyland.

They found Disneyland overwhelming and would like to see it again and again. Ms. Walker compared it to a place near The Hague in Holland called "Madurodam" that is a reproduction in perfect miniature of all the famous sites of Holland.

The entire vastness of the United States seems to impress the visitors the most, and they also noted "the people are so friendly, much more so than in Europe."

The next few weeks will be spent in showing their visitors around. Bert and Ria have more free time now. Helma is now married to Bert Borg ("a Dutch boy, of course"), and the mother of their first grandchild, Leslie. Marian has her own apartment and Joy and Richard are the only two children left at home.

They're now able to hire extra help at the Dutch Pride Dairy. Time was when Bert was there long before sun-up and only went home to rest when Ria and his daughters came down to help.

The struggle was long and hard, but "I've never been sorry," says Bert, and if you could look into those blue eyes, they couldn't be anything but sincere.

Dublin library looking for creative sewers

DUBLIN - Looking for a quick and creative sewing project?

Then the Friends of Dublin Library are looking for you.

They have a stack of white fabric squares at the Dublin Library (Village Parkway) awaiting the decorative needle of anyone who can embroider.

It's all part of an unusual fund-raising project: creation of a "family book quilt" which will be given away at the library's annual book fair on Sept. 13.

Getting an early start is essential. The committee making the quilt will have to have 80 completed squares before proceeding to step two, sewing them all together to make a double-sized creation.

They're hoping for donations of batting and a big piece of calico for the reverse. The white fabric was donated by the local Home Yardage.

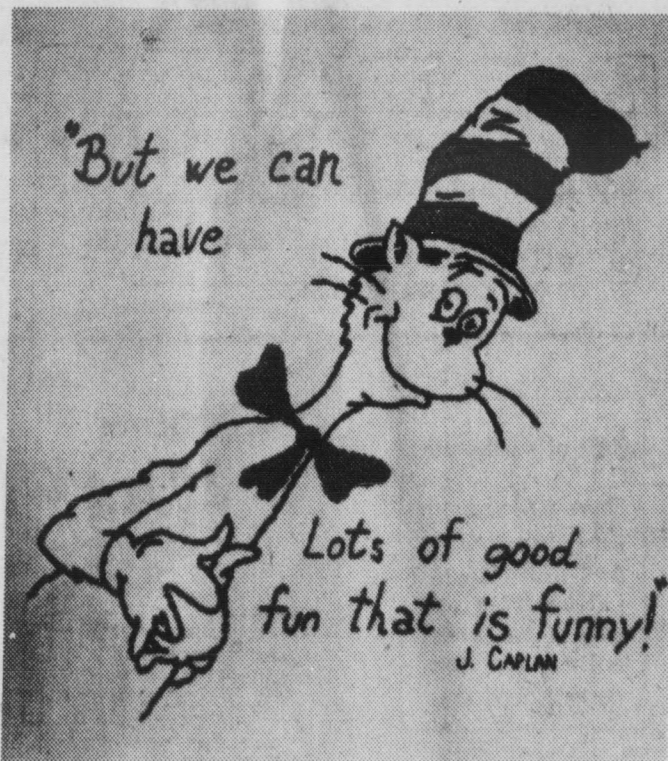

So far, sewing enthusiasts have picked up 41 squares. The ones already returned include a picture of a tree with 10 red buttons sewn on for apples (from the Dr. Seuss book, "Ten Apples Up on Top"); a sequined owl, an embroidered Alice in Wonderland, a little Mexican figure, some designs drawn in textile paint and a variety of other creations. Step Three will be an old-fashioned quilting bee where volunteers will hand-tie the quilt. It will be washable and sturdy when completed.

If the quilt is as big a hit as expected, the Friends of the Library may undertake making next year — one for children and adults.

Of course, the fair will have as always stacks of used books at low prices. The fair will be 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. on Sept. 13.

Valley non-profit organizations will be able this year to reserve a space and sell some of their own crafts and fund-raising items. Details on that angle of the new and improved book fair are available from Tanya Clark at 828-2338.

Valley Memorial hoping to improve patient care

LIVERMORE - To maintain and improve the quality of patient care and at the same time to lower the cost of hospitalization, a nurse coordinator now screens patients' admissions and monitors their length of stay at Valley Memorial Hospital.

Mary Jo Gudgell, R.N., assumed the new position in February when federal legislation required hospitals to monitor Medicare admissions.

In addition to reviewing Medicare patients, Mrs. Gudgell follows through the hospitalization of MediCal, many surgical and all medical patients to make sure each admission and length of stay is in accordance with criteria approved by the medical staff.

She also arranges room assignments for incoming patients and is in charge of discharge planning. She makes arrangements for patient transfers to other hospitals or nursing facilities.

Working with patients, their physicians, and families, the nurse coordinator makes any necessary referrals for home health care or to public health agencies and social services for patients being discharged.

She works closely with attending physicians and the Utilization Review Committee of the medical staff. The doctors on that committee meet regularly to insure that hospital facilities are used properly and that unnecessary admissions or long stays do not add to costs.

According to hospital administrator Tom Andrews, the main objectives of the program are to help control the rising cost of health care, use its findings to improve patient care, and to contribute to the continuing education program.

Refugee plight plagues

By DENIS D. GRAY
BANGKOK, Thailand (AP) — The fate of tens of thousands of Indochinese refugees still in Thailand hangs in the balance: The United States is not prepared to take the bulk of them; the Thai government says it can't keep them, and the United Nations is only starting to tackle the problem.

Thai and American officials estimate there are 40,000 to 50,000 Cambodians, Laotians and Vietnamese in Thailand. And while the influx of Vietnamese has stopped, Cambodians and Laotians continue to come in.

Cambodia fell to the Communist-dominated Khmer Rouge in mid-April. South Vietnam fell on April 30 and Laos since has come gradually under the dominant influence of the pro-Communist Pathet Lao.

Judging from the latest instructions from Washington, U.S. officials say, at best a third of the estimated 7,000 Cambodians in Thailand might be allowed into the United States.

But no mention is made of the largest refugee group, the Meo hill tribes people of Laos, who were considered among the best and most loyal fighters the U.S. government supported in Indochina.

The United States has to date taken about 80 per cent of the Indochinese refugees that have already been resettled outside of Thailand, according to United Nations and U.S. Embassy statistics.

Thailand has been saddled with the problem of caring for the refugees mostly because of 1,700 miles of border with Laos and Cambodia and proximity to Vietnam. It faces the refugee problem with considerable political embarrassment since the Thai government is anxious for peaceful coexistence with its new Communist-dominated neighbors.

"Our standing policy toward the refugees is to send all of them back to their homelands while helping them the best we can for humanitarian reasons," Premier Kukrit Pramoj recently told newsmen. "We don't want the refugees to create misunderstandings with our Indochinese neighbors."

Most Western observers, however, do not foresee the Thais actually forcing refugees back across the frontiers and predict that some at least may quietly be allowed to settle in the country. But largely, Thai policy has been one of "wait and see," hoping the United States and other countries will take the refugees off their hands.

Several reliable U.S. diplomatic sources and American refugee relief workers here also say high-ranking Thai officials have told them privately that the lives of the refugees are not being made too comfortable so as to dampen any desires for staying in Thailand permanently.

U.S. Embassy officials in the refugee program say many of the remaining 2,000 Vietnamese refugees in Thailand meet the two criteria for admittance to the United States — employment by the U.S. government at the time of the American evacuation of South Vietnam or having a relative in the United States.

Very few of the Cambodians meet such requirements for entry and almost all the 2,400 "spaces" set aside by Washington for Cambodians coming from Thailand have now been filled and the refugees flown out of the country, the officials say. These "spaces" were not subject to the normal criteria.

A State Department cable earlier this month said Cambodian and Lao "leaders" and "high-risk personnel" — those whose lives might be in serious danger if they returned to their homelands — would be granted entry, the officials said. It is difficult to estimate how many refugees could fit into these two categories, but a U.S. diplomat charged with the Cambodian refugee problem said between 2,000 and 3,000 might qualify.

The estimated 4,000 ethnic Lao and 34,000 Meo tribesmen have not been designated as "refugees" by the American government and consequently none has to date been admitted to the United States, the officials say.

Thousands of the refugees live under conditions which the U.S. diplomat charged with the Cambodians described as "generally poor." He said that during his recent visit to one of the largest refugee camps, about 1,000 Cambodians had no meat, vegetables or fruit to eat.

Miscue means aid for Indian school

TUCSON, Ariz. (AP) — If you miscue a pool shot at the Turquoise Turtle Tavern, you'll wind up helping finance a school on the Papago Indian Reservation west of Tucson.

The bar's owner, known only as Turquoise, says she has started a fund fed by pool players who knock balls off the table for the planned education complex at the tribal capitol of Sells.

Turquoise says she has raised $1,900 since January through errant pool shots and raffles of turquoise jewelry.

Jerry Chambers, a bar patron who confesses to "contributing a great deal to the quarter fund," says that when a player knocks the ball to the floor, he must plunk 25 cents in the school fund kitty.

"Anytime the ball touches the floor, everyone yells, 'That's a quarter!' and the man must stop immediately and put in his quarter," Chambers says. "Everybody then applauds and play resumes."

"The best thing about this whole effort is discovering how many nice people there are," Turquoise says. "Even strangers who stop in for a beer and play pool donate their quarters willingly when a ball goes off the table."

On a good night, the fund draws as much as $16 from pool playing alone, she says.

Chambers and other pool players say they think it's a good way to raise money for the school.

Thor Schultz, director of the tribe's Head Start program, agrees but says she was concerned at first because the money was coming from a bar. "It certainly is a unique way to raise money," Mrs. Schultz says. "At first, I was worried. But now I think that maybe by contributing their quarters, they aren't drinking as much."

She says $300,000 is needed for the complex and about $15,000 has been raised so far, including the Turquoise Turtle's $1,900.

Officials jarred—who lifted the lids?

By JOHN SHURR
MUNCIE, Ind. (AP) — Ball Corp., one of the nation's largest manufacturers of home canning supplies, said Friday it is investigating the disappearance of canning jar lids from its warehouses. A company spokesman termed the thefts internal pilferage, but he declined to be more specific.

A Ball spokesman said fewer than one million lids were missing. Another report put the loss as high as 30 million lids — a little less than 2 per cent of the total number of replacement lids expected to be produced by all U.S. companies this year.

Consumers across the country have been clamoring for lids to can home-grown fruits and vegetables. The Federal Trade Commission is investigating the shortage.

Ex-football star is a high court member

By JACK STEVENSON

ANAHEIM, Calif. (AP) — In 1937, Byron "Whizzer" White was an All-American football star and a Rhodes Scholar. Now, 38 years later, he's a member of the U.S. Supreme Court.

A modest Pat Haden doesn't see himself cast in the same mold, but he starred three seasons as the University of Southern California quarterback, won a Rhodes Scholarship and currently plays pro ball for the Southern California Sun of the World Football League.

White played professional football for the Detroit Lions before going into law, and Haden plans to enter the legal profession after his pro career. Pat signed a three-year contract with the Sun for a bonus and an estimated $25,000 salary for his first season.

Haden threw the touchdown pass and two-point conversion that brought USC an 18-17 victory in the 1975 Rose Bowl game over Ohio State.

How does a top-flight football player maintain a 3.8 grade average, just slightly below straight "A" for four years?

"It's something that has to come from within," Haden says. "What I was doing, I enjoyed very much both academically and athletically. I think, obviously, when you enjoy something you do, you're better at it."

"I was an English literature major and enjoyed that. I enjoyed both the reading and the writing."

"So it was more or less fun. I felt I was doing something that would improve me as a person. I did relatively well in both because I was happy doing it."

He had to budget his time throughout college, but doesn't feel that it was too tough. "Football took all afternoon from 2 to 6 o'clock. I usually had one, two or three classes a day. When I got home shortly after six, I had from then to 10 to study. And if that wasn't enough, I could study longer or get up earlier in the morning. My day usually went from 9 a.m. until midnight or 12:30."

"That's not unusual. A lot of people working do it and a lot of students do it—particularly the pre-med students, who work all the time."

"I don't think it was an added burden to me, because I enjoyed playing football."

Haden, 22, won out in the Rhodes examinations and will leave for England and his advanced studies on Sept. 27. He'll be able to play eight regular season games for the Sun and hopes next year to play a full season before resuming his studies.

"With Daryle Lamonica hurt, it presents an unusual situation," he admits. Haden was originally listed as the No. 3 quarterback behind the veteran Lamonica and Mike Ernst, who was with the Cincinnati Bengals last year.

Haden hopes to complete his education in England, return for more football and then go into law.

Haden said playing football at Southern California helped his social life — when he had time for it. "Especially at a school like USC, which is very socially oriented and very football oriented, it certainly helped me."

"I don't know if it is right or just to be treated as a special person because you are playing football. There are more noble professions in the world than playing football. Yet it worked well for me and I think I handled it well. It was a very positive experience for me at USC in all facets."

When he eventually gets his law degree, Haden says, he may go into politics and doesn't shut the door on the possibility of becoming a legal representative for athletes.

Haden is happy he sought the Rhodes Scholarship, even though it will conflict with his shot at pro football.

"Playing football as long as I have, I always wondered if I could play professionally," he says. "But if I don't make it, I don't make it. I feel I'm a very fortunate young man to be able to play professional football and still be able to get an education such as is offered at Oxford."

Restoration may become big business

NEW YORK (AP) — Historic restoration could become a thriving industry over the next decade, a spur to numerous community improvements as well as an educational and patriotic experience, Harry Williams believes.

Interest already is whetted by projects at more than 1,200 sites, including Williamsburg, Va., Sturbridge, Mass., Grand Isle, Neb., and many in the Far West. They range from one building, such as the old opera house in Leadville, Colo., to entire communities.

Now, with the nation's bi-centennial celebrations focusing on history, enthusiasm is added. Communities are learning from each other that restoration is better than urban renewal.

In almost all instances a successful restoration improves the economy and environment. Real estate values rise. Property owners are encouraged to improve their homes. Jobs are created.

"Almost any community could find something and go to work on it," says Williams, one of the leading homebuilders in the Northeast, and a consultant on community developments.

A theme is essential. Williamsburg is patriotism, Sturbridge is the pastoral experience just before industrialization, Mystic, Conn., is the lure of the sea.

Williams at the moment is spending a good deal of time working with the people of New Harmony, Ind., in restoring that tiny community's educational, scientific and religious heritage.

To guide his efforts at New Harmony, which is the site of two experiments in communal living, Williams surveyed some of the most successful restorations in order to learn their secrets.

Philanthropy almost always is the seed, he found, but almost all projects, even if they began as simple patriotic or philosophic statements, "somewhere along the line crystallized as self-sustaining educational ventures."

Restoration, he found, "is either a business or else a very expensive philanthropy," and new restoration projects would save themselves time and grief if they realized this early in their efforts.

"Restoration for restoration sake is extremely expensive," Williams found. More accurately, some of the most successful restorations spent millions of dollars and 20 to 30 years to discover this. Invariably they evolved a philosophy of restoration for education's sake.

To attempt to control the entire environment, Williams advises, can be extraordinarily expensive. "Don't control for the sake of control, but for the educational experience of the visitor."

The focus on education permits the restorer to make his reconstruction a vital, living experience rather than a passive exhibit. It encourages the overseers to be selective in their use of funds. Eventually it provides income.

Red Cross safety rules

The American Red Cross has released ten safety rules for private pool owners to help maintain a healthy and happy pool. They are:

- 1) Instruct members of your household and guests on the restrictions and rules regulating the use of your pool.
- 2) Know how to give artificial respiration — and teach your family.
- 3) A heaving line, light pole and ring buoy should be provided within the pool enclosure — available for immediate use. A list of emergency phone numbers — including: doctor; rescue squad; etc. And a first aid kit should be readily accessible.
- 4) Store pool chemicals out of reach of children. Always allow sufficient time after adding chemicals before using pool. If pool is not equipped with a filtering system, change water frequently.
- 5) The pool should be enclosed to prevent unauthorized use.
- 6) A lifeline, with floats attached, should be used to separate the shallow portion of the pool from the deep end when non-swimmers are present.
- 7) Use a pool cover — strong enough to support the weight of a child — when away from the premises for any extended period of time — and also during the winter months.
- 8) Do not obstruct view of the pool from the house by use of trees, shrubs, screens or other structures.
- 9) Use only plastic, metal or paper containers in the pool area. Use of glass or sharp objects should be prohibited.
- 10) Maintain the water clarity and purity comparable to normal drinking water or your local board of health standards.

Electrical protection means water safety

By Harlan Teller

UL's Public Information Office

A quick dip in a family swimming pool is a refreshing remedy for the long, hot summer. However, a piece of poolside electrical equipment can become an instrument of death if damaged or handled in a manner that causes electric current to leak into people.

The danger of leakage current is intensified at a poolside location, where it is likely that a person's skin will become wet. Skin moisture significantly reduces the skin's capacity to resist electric shock.

Underwriters Laboratories, Inc. (UL), independent, not-for-profit organization testing for public safety, urges you to keep the following tips in mind when handling electrical equipment near a swimming pool.

Leakage current occurs when a flow of electricity is diverted from its intended path to ground. This irregularity is termed a "ground fault." Even a small quantity of leakage current can prove fatal to a normally healthy adult.

A protective device called a "ground fault circuit interrupter" (GFCI) is designed to interrupt the electrical power supply if a ground fault is detected. A GFCI will respond to a ground fault current as low as 5/1000 of an ampere, and will shut off the source of electric power in as little as 1/40 second, less time than it takes a heart to beat once.

The area around a swimming pool is particularly susceptible to leakage current. A defective filter pump motor, electric panelboard, or underwater light can cause disaster. Appliances used around the pool, such as electric barbecues, radios, televisions, or electric hand tools are also potentially dangerous.

UL recommends that you install GFCI's in every circuit that supplies electric power to the pool area. This practice is also called for in the 1975 National Electrical Code. The Code provides installation requirements that are widely implemented by various electrical inspection authorities.

The installation of GFCI's is the answer to one facet of swimming pool safety. UL recommends that the following safety rules should also be observed:

- Never handle radios, barbecues, or other electrical appliances while wet;
- Never run extension cords close to the pool;
- Never run overhead wires within ten feet of the pool;
- Never splice or repair cords of swimming pool equipment — replace them at the first sign of damage;
- Be sure that the electrical power supply is shut off prior to servicing your pool equipment. You should also place a warning tag on the switches which you shut off. If a switch is not tagged, a bather might innocently turn it on, and you could then be subjected to a serious electrical shock;
- The pool maintenance equipment that you use should be designed for that purpose. It should be plugged into a grounding type receptacle provided with GFCI protection. Use electrical pool vacuums or pool sweeps only when the pool is unoccupied;

- If you feel a tingling sensation when in the water or approaching the pool, tell someone on deck to turn off all electrical power feeding equipment and appliances in and around the pool. You should then leave the pool area as quickly as possible, without contacting metallic objects.

Children should be specifically warned about the consequences of this hazard. There have been cases reported in which children, aware of the presence of an electrical field, were hurt or killed because they dared each other to stay in the water longer or more closely approach the source of the field;

- Look for the UL listing on your electrical equipment. It's your assurance that the design of the equipment has been tested with regard to nationally recognized safety standards.

UL warns that electricity and water don't mix. To avoid a shocking experience, follow these important precautions.

Summer program closes

"Mountain High," the backpacking section in the "Sierras to the Pacific" Summer Outdoor Education program, completed its 2½ week schedule Thursday. Emphasizing backpacking experiences for beginners and experienced campers, the initial week started with classroom orientation and one overnight experience. Trips to the Sierras, Big Sur and Desolation Valley were included.

The other two sections of the program, for K-3 and 4-7 grade children, were completed in mid-July. The primary age program, dubbed "Over The River and Through The Woods," gave children an opportunity to explore through day trips to many natural and agricultural areas.

"Camping Beneath The Stars", for the intermediate age group, featured trips to Big Basin, Natural Bridges, Snyder's Camp and Point Reyes. The integrated learning experiences centered around camping and outdoor skills, aiming towards a finer appreciation of the natural environment.

Jim Kimbell and Bob Pucci were in charge of the total program.

Early Childhood Education

Major school program reform?

(This is the first of three articles on Early Childhood Education in California's elementary schools, with an additional view of its application in valley schools such as Fairlands in Pleasanton)

Exactly what is this program referred to as ECE that Wilson Riles, state superintendent of public instruction, considers the major reform this year in California education?

The program encompasses 280,000 children in 1,300 schools in most California school districts. Riles says that Early Childhood Education is "a revolutionary plan to reform schooling from kindergarten through the third grade. The effort is pumping new hope and vigor into public education by making fundamental changes in the traditional ways schools work," Riles says.

He underscores the revolutionary aspect by noting that ECE (1) is beginning to restructure the entire educational program at four grade levels, (2) it is bringing together all of the most successful learning and teaching practices into each classroom, and (3) it is giving parents a meaningful voice in reform of their children's schools.

"ECE has not discovered a magical new method of teaching or learning," Riles points out. "It has no easy solutions. Instead, it leans heavily on old-fashioned hard work and the creativeness of many diverse talents."

Early Childhood is a new kind of school, Riles says, where children have an opportunity to learn more than they did under traditional programs and to achieve at a level nearer their full potential. It is a carefully constructed attempt to improve pupil achievement. It coordinates previously fragmented efforts and capitalizes on the promising elements of existing programs. Resources of the community are encouraged to focus on the child's needs.

ECE was enacted on a phase-in basis in November, 1972, when Senate Bill 1302 was approved by the state legislature and signed into law by Governor Ronald Reagan.

In 1973-74, the first year of operation, $25 million was appropriated for ECE. The plan involved approximately 172,000 children (14 per cent of the state's enrollment in kindergarten through the third grade) in 1,013 schools in 800 school districts.

In 1974-75, ECE's second year of operation, the program was expanded to include 22 per cent of the children in the same four grade levels. The 1974-75 state appropriation of $41 million for ECE enabled 829 school districts to serve approximately 250,000 children at more than 1,300 schools. The appropriation provides participating schools with an extra allocation of $130 for each child in the ECE program; an additional $65 per pupil was provided for the lowest achievers.

Riles points out that ECE provides a comprehensive approach to improve the skills and abilities of all children—regardless of their economic backgrounds or unique educational needs—by capitalizing on the learning opportunities present in a child's early years.

The program stresses the need for early detection of learning problems and early intervention to anticipate and to correct problems before they become serious. This approach, according to the findings of educational research, is more effective and far less expensive than remediation in later years.

Fairlands in Pleasanton will begin its third year in the ECE come September. In its first year, kindergarten and first graders were followed by kindergarten through third this past school year. The latter amounted to 418 children.

The program will cover the same four grades in 1975-76 and receive $55,356 in funding.

This figure is arrived at after subtracting $10,000 in Miller-Unruh reading funds as these basically cover the same children.

In future articles we will look into future prospects of the program and concentrate more on its effect on school children in Livermore and Pleasanton.

Columbus Realty Affiliates With Matchmaker Home Marketing Systems

Instant communications with a nationwide organization of independent real estate brokers has been instituted by Columbus Realty, Livermore, California. Mike Johnson said today, "Columbus Realty is enthusiastic about its recent affiliation with MATCHMAKER Home Marketing Systems, Inc."

MATCHMAKER, a rapidly expanding real estate marketing system formed by experienced real estate professionals, is designed to bind together real estate brokers throughout the country to better serve the country's increasingly mobile population.

Columbus Realty will have the most modern telecopier equipment installed in its offices here, permitting it to transmit pictures of local homes currently on the market to MATCHMAKER headquarters and thence to other areas throughout the United States. In a matter of minutes, future residents of this region may receive information and pictures of homes for sale here as they sit in the offices of brokers in other cities. Residents leaving this vicinity may see pictures of homes in other cities by stopping at the Columbus Realty office.

In accord with consumer protection, Columbus Realty also offers a home protection plan that eliminates the fear of expensive replacement cost for major repairs to the heating, plumbing, electrical systems, built-in appliances and the structure itself. It also assures the lending institutions that the new owner will not face major repair bills during the first twelve months of ownership. Among the many services offered by Columbus Realty is a guaranteed home sales plan.

"Because of our affiliation with MATCHMAKER Home Marketing Systems," said Mr. Johnson, "a family moving from our area can list with us and start packing. For instance, a company offers an employee a promotion, but he must move to another city. Sounds great, but he is suddenly faced with two problems. First, finding the right home in the new area, and second, selling his present home. We have a guaranteed home sales plan designed to handle both situations. We can show him homes that are currently available in his new area in a matter of minutes and will purchase his current home to make his entire relocation an easy one."

Mike Johnson also said: "In this modern age when new methods are required to serve our customers better, Columbus Realty will continue to strive for progress, as we have by joining MATCHMAKER Home Marketing Systems, Inc."

An Editorial

There was a time when the people's right, and the nation's responsibility to provide for "a proper education for every man, woman and child" was a bulwark of these United States. Now the bulwark is being battered, and there are those to suggest the system can not now succeed, and perhaps never could.

From kindergarten through state college system, the principle of "equal education" is being challenged today as never before. That test is no more severe than within this one valley, and the results of that local struggle may be an indication of how public schools across the nation are about to fare.

The confrontation takes many forms. In Livermore it is the new move toward "fundamentalism," which is surely a reaction to yesterday's "new liberalism." For Pleasanton, there are those who see a revival of the old parochial school concept as the only answer to their classroom lament. While in Dublin and the San Ramon Valley that same quest long ago found fruit in the development of Valley Christian Center, and the promise of yet another of those private institutions.

By whatever name, the campaign is clearly one against the time-honored concept of "equal education." Far from a bigoted or even racial reaction, this movement is supported by many respected educators and legislators: "Public schools cannot succeed, and are not succeeding, in today's complex America," they say. The system is simply too broad for a society that now cries out for specialization in so many fields of endeavor.

Because this journalist is far from expert in the matters of education, we would not attempt to set forth all the reasons that the public school system might be failing across our land. We can all be somewhat expert however in the system that serves our own community, for the betterment of our own society. And it is clear that many among us are far from satisfied.

If it is any comfort, that same dissatisfaction is shared by the state's highest officer. "I find it ironic that in a time when Johnny can't read, his mother is learning macramé," Governor Brown has said in criticism of just one phase of public education. At stake here is the public-funded adult education (and summer school) program, which seeks to extend the classroom well beyond the confines of the K-to-12 program, and make that a 12-month, 16-hour-day affair of almost unlimited scope and opportunity.

But while we might be succeeding in broadening the appeal of public education, we are losing thousands of college youngsters who now find that system "a bore, or a waste of time." And we are losing thousands of California families which see in the "separation of morality from the classroom" a threat to the mores of all society.

It is a movement that can soon become a wave, it is a neighborhood critique that threatens to mount a rebellion. Before we come to that, intelligent, reasonable people should ask "Is it possible to mold public education to better suit the broad spectrum of our society?" For if the answer to that question is "No," or if we don't even have the courage to ask it, then the inevitable course will be destruction of the world's most unique (and some reason "history's most successful") educational system.

That is a bold step. It may even be a good one. But before we take it, we had best use the intelligence we already have to fully understand just what it is we are doing.

San Ramon City?

There is a great deal of talk these days about "which city will San Ramon Valley ultimately wind up with?" The guessing ranges from a Danville-based incorporation movement, to one that would start in Dublin, and spill across the county line to pick up the lower reaches of San Ramon.

In all of this nobody has dared suggest that the valley of San Ramon might be quite happy with its status quo, preferring to retain its rural status and ignoring any and all talk of cityhood. Now such a possibility has been raised, and by no less an authority than a member of the Contra Costa County board of supervisors.

"The mere fact that an unincorporated area lies in a particular city's sphere does not mean it will ultimately become part of that city," Supervisor Edmund Linscheid has said. "People have the right to live in unincorporated areas if they wish."

It is a right which has gained considerable value in these days of super-regionalism and super mayors. The role of the city as prime defender of "home rule" is considerably less clear today, than it was two or ten years ago.

Contra Costa County's chain of unincorporated villages, commercial clusters and subdivisions has always been unique. They are also, for the most part, apparently quite successful. San Ramon Valley (including the unincorporated hamlet of Danville) is the most evident example of this "country living." It is also the prime target of most incorporation movements in the southern half of that county.

Personally, we still prefer the small city, with its potential of self determination, home rule and all that. But that feeling of municipal laissez faire is not shared by those in Sacramento and San Francisco, who see each small city as a thorn in the side of true regionalism. Added to that is the mind-boggling array of paper work which must flow from here to Washington, before any federal dollars can flow from them to us.

It is little wonder that hinterland spreads such as San Ramon, Tassajara and Sunol are today asking "What has incorporation really got to offer us?" At the very least they should be permitted to come up with their own answer.

BART - Go to hell

Well, that brand new $65,000-a-year manager has arrived to salvage Bay Area Rapid Transit, and of course the first thing he does is cut the deficit by slashing service... in those areas which have gotten damned little for their BART tax dollars from day one, and now stand to get even less.

While we will not defend maintaining a transportation link that is a proven failure in gaining public response, still there are some points about "halting the BART bus links to places like Livermore and Pleasanton" which just don't add up. First, the entire BART system is operating at deficit, probably always will. We would like to know why the deficit at this end of the line is any different from that which ties Fremont or Antioch to downtown San Francisco? Second, there is a matter of service rendered for dollars spent. It costs more to get from Livermore to San Francisco than from any point in Fremont to "The City." Further, our bus connection is considerably slower, less frequent and somewhat less appealing than those shiny steel trains. But because our people—in just six months—have not flocked with unbounded enthusiasm to that second-class link, we are to be penalized, denied any service whatsoever.

Frankly, this move is not the least bit surprising. We predicted as much when this whole bus-to-train extension was first proposed. "BART will give us this old carrot, then make a study showing we aren't jumping at the opportunity; and finally conclude that we neither want nor deserve any kind of public transit system." That is what we warned then; it has now come to pass.

When will we learn that BART was never conceived or designed to serve people. The entire thrust was, and is, to salvage the shopping and employment hubs in San Francisco and Oakland. Only when there are sufficient numbers of us to fill a San Francisco-bound train will they consent to extending that service into this hinterland. The new BART manager has learned that lesson well.

Let them cut off the service. Let them also forget the buses and the trains. Just give us back our tax dollars, get us out of that ill-fated, bankrupt district, and let Alito and his crowd drown in their own juice.

I arrived in that fair village and took my first full time newspaper job on my 21st birthday and was puzzled by the width and depth of the main street.

That something less than thriving community on the banks of the Feather river was blessed with curbs which rose as high as five feet above the street.

"You'll find out when the river rises," the city's constable and only peace officer told me. "And it is going to rise any time now."

The river rose and I found out. A man could only cross those streets on bridges in some places in those pre-flood control days.

Gridley was a fine town for a young man to launch a newspaper career. Sunday I dropped into the lobby of the hotel and asked one of the vacant eyed laddies sitting in the lobby what a man did for entertainment in town.

The old fellow brought his eyes back into focus and answered thoughtfully.

"Ain't nothing for a man to do in this town except drink or go to church. There's a thousand people here and a church for every hundred." He paused while I digested that sage observation, then continued, having decided, I suppose, confession is good for the soul.

"Ain't been to church in 40 years myself," he concluded.

Then his eyes shifted back out of focus while he returned to that never never land in which he had been

The week in retrospect

BART tune off key

The latest pronouncement from the Bay Area Rapid Transit District offices regarding the express bus service evidences a tune beyond the familiar ring of "The Budget Cutter."

What I hear is someone who doesn't know the words OR the lyrics yet. The "singer" in this case is Frank Herringer, new General Manager for BART. I hope I am not prejudicing my position by the fact that Herringer was hired just a month ago at an annual salary of some $67,000.

Earlier in the week Herringer declared that the express bus routes from BART stations to valley and Contra Costa County points were losing a bundle of money and the entire service would be reviewed. At the Thursday meeting, BART directors voted to extend the bus contract until the end of September.

Previously, the service was to run until the end of the year. But when Herringer looked at the fare box and cost of operation figures his reaction was to consider a review of the service towards the end of either 1) continuing full service, 2) cutting it back or 3) dropping it completely.

As duly noted a month or more ago, the express buses are losing $2.20 on every passenger. This figure is arrived at by subtracting the average fare put in the box from the cost of operation ($2.55 is the latest figure).

Granted, these figures are evidence for great concern. We can understand Herringer calling for a review. But equally as important in this matter is the fact that taxpayers in the valley and Contra Costa have been paying in and getting nothing out for years. No thanks to the previous BART administration's practices.

So along comes an express bus service (last December) to get commuters, shoppers and pleasure-seekers to BART stations. The patronage is below par to promising from the start with no indication at any time that the buses will some day become packed from early morning to late at night. And, in truth, if any transit expert has predicted otherwise I did not hear same...for to predict bulging buses would be evidence of a lack of knowledge of the transit scene.

People are just not going to abandon their cars (or such private commuter lines as Franciscan) for a service that is slower, not as reliable, might involve a transfer and won't necessarily get you near where your destination is.

The reason why AC Transit lines in other parts of the East Bay may be doing well is that they are established routes. AC is also quite visible in the immediate East Bay because of these lines and a pretty good publicity program. However, AC buses are not nearly as visible in the valley for no other reason than the service is hourly through most of the daylight hours. Also, after a good initial publicity campaign on the express buses, the ads have fallen off.

I am constantly amazed at the tunnel vision of people seeking a solution to any problem, in this case transportation. If it's not put in front of them constantly (via publicity), the response at the fare box is liable to level or drop off.

Herringer must realize, as indicated by BART director Robert Allen of Livermore, the "feeder bus system is something we need." Herringer will have to come to understand the "history" of this area's participation in the BART District. That history has been largely one of paying but not getting anything.

He must place the operational deficits in perspective and get that across to all who will "study" the situation in the next two months...especially the directors from San Francisco.

For, a discontinuance of BART-AC service after October 1...should it come to that...would be an outright betrayal and sufficient reason to remove BART's presence from this valley.

Letters to the Times

Wake up America

Editor, The Times:

I have just completed reading "Come Nenev, Come Tyre" by Allen Drury. This is the fifth in his series dealing with Washington and the political scene.

In this book, Mr. Drury describes how through the legislative process and a weak president this country, a free press, and the right of legitimate dissent could be lost. He seems to be saying, "Hey, America! Wake Up!"

Mr. Drury points out that somehow as individuals acquire power they are suddenly blessed with the knowledge that they know what's best for everyone else. He further notes that these people come to power on a wave of dissent, proclaiming the right of dissent as loudly as they know how, but once in power, they turn around and suppress dissent—particularly when it is against them. They do this in many overt and subtle ways with the knowledge and consent of the governed because they have learned that to persuade enough of the governed to withhold their consent they've got it made.

On the surface, his story seems so far fetched that one's reaction implies: Could increased militancy, bombings, and a growing crime rate be the result of large numbers of people in various circles feeling that they have been disenfranchised and are faced with an impossible and intolerable situation?

What does all this imply? I think it means that our leaders, those in decision making positions, must have integrity, be honest, and fair minded. It requires that those in a leadership role must not only listen but also hear. This country depends upon responsible leadership at all levels and in all activities. It starts in our own backyard.

Livermore chamber

Editor, The Times:

In your front page story on the chamber of commerce running out of funds, it seems the chamber is just following the city hall financial condition—they've been running out of funds ever since they started that Southern Pacific underpass project!

Kamena is just as nutty as the rest of the city hall bunch. He wants the business men to pay more to the chamber to keep it going. But in another part of the article, he's bragging that it was the chamber which asked the city council not to increase business fees until further study. What he really meant was, he wanted the chamber to get to the businessmen's pockets before city hall!

Round the town

These are tough times. The economy is out of joint. No more big overtime checks. No checks at all, for some. So do we crawl into our hole? - to hibernate until the recession passes by? Heck no.

"Las Vegas is having a record year," the reports tell us. Has something to do with "the less cash folks have, the more anxious they are to double their stake."

Even the county fair racing circuit is reporting a record inflow of cash. The twelve-day show at Pleasanton pulled in one million bucks for each of those pari-mutuel days. Fantastic! Everybody is out to make it quick, make it easy—or at least a little easier than laboring 40 hours for a less-than-living wage.

"Beer sales in California during the first six months of 1975 were up over the pace of one year ago." Not much, but enough to convince us that brew lovers don't hold back in times of economic stress. They increase the intake a little.

We are pouring a new patio at our place. Hot work. The contractor gave us his price. He forgot to figure in the cost of beer. "I reckon it's a two six-pack job," he reports, then adding—"per day." If the job drags, the need for more Cores rises. Pretty soon we are stuck with a bunch of drunken patio builders, and not much to show for their effort.

Some folks are meeting the recession head on. Starting their own vegetable gardens. Bypassing the high cost of produce. Or so they think.

"The success of these projects depends largely on the amount of work the family is willing to put in, coupled with a little luck," the Agricultural Council of California tells us. We tried our hand at a few strawberries. Lots of work, damned little luck.

"I don't think you water them enough," she advises me, from the vantage point of her kitchen sink. So for one week I pour on the water, faithfully. Sad city.

"Not only aren't we getting any more strawberries, but the ones we do get look shrunk, or something," I announce.

"I have been reading that too much fluorine in the water is not good for strawberries," she says. "I think all that watering may have killed off the berries."

That was the end of that. Home gardening can not be sustained where city water is chlorinated or fluoridated. I wonder if the California Ag Council is aware of all these pitfalls.

"There is more to growing food than just placing a seed in the ground," their bulletin advises. But they find a measure of joy in our misery. "Home gardeners, with their problems in raising small quantities of food, can better understand the complexities of commercial agriculture." Amen.

The political times are tough, too. That Friday night social gathering aimed at retiring Jack Gardella doubled as a "Let's Get Murphy To Run Again" reprise. Gardella served on the county planning commission for 26 years before calling it quits. Don Murphy has had just 16 years as a county supervisor, but that may be enough. Murphy is making his quadrennial "Never again!" speech. The troops are worried. The field is slim. The risks considerable.

"The devil you know is better than the devil you don't." That's an old Irish saying, I am informed. Not sure if Supervisor Murphy heard that one from his Irish forebears. But his backers know the line well.

At least Murphy doesn't have the problem facing Congressman Fortney Stark, when and if the feds decide to close down Sunol Post Office, as an economy measure.

Actually it is the Postmaster General who has determined the system could save up to millions every year by removing post offices "from small rural stations and villages where the volume of mail does not justify that office."

In the Southern Cal hamlet of Crest the order has gone out to shut down the post office. Because it only grosses $12,000 a year. The folks in Crest are up in arms. May get so mad they'll take their name off those toothpaste tubes. The ones that prevent cavities, because "Crest contains fluorides." Which is what killed off my blessed strawberries. Close their damned post office, says I.

There have been some changes, whether Johnny Hines saw them or not. Some miles or hills and rocky highways with bruises, bumps and scars to match. A wrinkle born of laughter here and there and some furrows ploughed by tears.

Of course Johnny didn't see the wearing effects of the abrasive sands of time. As soon as he saw and recognized me he looked through rose colored glasses back through the years to the time when he was a kid photographer and I a reporter only slightly damp behind the years marching together through the wackiest period this madman's business.

Those were joyous days and I shifted back with him over that prickly pear and primrose path on which I have traveled through the years to a world where we could both remember only laughter, high adventure and good times.

It was a wonderful reunion, my friends, a marvelous journey back into yesterday where the wheat squeezings were dry as the dust in a summer storm and the girls all as pretty as a South Pacific sunset.

It lasted just long enough to remain bitter sweet and to make me an hour and a half late for dinner and due for a little hell at home.

Of course Skeeter never raises hell. She just says, "As long as you were happy, dear. But I do wish you'd phone." Which is worse, of course, than the damdest tongue lashing a man could get.

Sound and Fury

Walt Hecox

Earlier Thursday a half dozen of us sat in the otherwise deserted banquet room of the Pleasanton Hotel eating a freshly caught striped bass and talking about a variety of important items including the reason for the idleness of the main streets in Pleasanton and, I suppose, Livermore.

They had to be wide in the old days to allow a team of six or eight horses and the drayage wagons they were pulling to turn around.

Terry Hufft wondered audibly why some of the Pleasanton curbs were so steep and if, perhaps, the streets and sidewalks were designed to make life easier for a man to get off his horse when he was in his cups.

The proper answer was about that wet but involving water rather than wheat squeezings, a fact Terry would have known had he worked in Gridley some two score years ago.

Eskimos in Dublin?

Sherry Felts (left), Janice Scott and Vince Perry display the handiwork of the Cronin School Summer School program. The whole school did units on Eskimos and the school project was the construction of an Eskimo village. Sandy Henriott's second and third graders made the igloo, Chris Martinez' first and second graders built the totem poles, Mary Lee Huffman's first graders shaped the walrus and Vyann Evans' third and fourth graders constructed the kayak.

Two good meetings in a row

MESD, teachers closer together

After months of no progress, the Murray Elementary School District and its unhappy teachers are finally making progress at the negotiating table.

"The last two meetings have been very good," beamed MESD Superintendent Don Williams, although both have concerned ancillary issues.

Regina Paulus of the Certificated Employees' Council (CEC), which represents the teachers, reported happily "We got several issues straightened out" but then said that the teachers may not take advantage of the agreements reached.

The latest round in the negotiations resulted when the teachers declared an impasse and called for a fact-finding committee. However, the district policy on fact-finding caused the teachers to balk and the last sessions have dealt only with that and not with the issues still dividing the two parties.

However, Paulus said that even though the teachers and district have almost reached agreement now on how to go about fact-finding they may decide to withdraw their call for it.

In any event, the agreements reached concerned who would pick the third member of the committee if the first two couldn't agree on a selection as well as eliminating the clause that requires all members of the fact-finding committee not to have been involved in previous negotiations.

Also, both sides were in accordance that fact-finding can be dropped and a mediator called in immediately if both sides were mutually agreeable.

The final stumbling block in the fact-finding procedure is exactly how the findings of the committee will be revealed. The teachers originally wanted the details revealed at a public hearing and recommendations from the committee.

The district has now countered that the committee should make its report to the board negotiating team and the CEC, while the teachers would settle for a report to the board itself and the CEC.

Williams indicated the district would be happy to see the committee chairman report to the board but wanted the original findings reported to the board team and CEC.

Indications are that issue will be resolved soon and that the next meet-and-confer session will follow the next board meeting August 4.

"I hope with everything that we can settle soon," said Williams.

Although that may be optimistic, at least the log jam of the last two months seems to have finally been broken.

Silvergate project smaller

Alameda County Bureau

To the delight of the Silvergate Homeowners' Association, the Ward Ryder Company will request that its 12.28 acre parcel on Church Hill (near St Raymond's) in Dublin be rezoned for residential development.

The action will come at Monday's 1:30 p.m. Alameda County Planning Commission meeting in Hayward and culminates a series of protests by homeowners in the area against Ward Ryder's original proposal.

The company had hoped to put up a series of closely packed houses on non-county roads, and even won preliminary approval from the planners, but now it appears they will settle for a smaller development with homes more in line with the surrounding area.

This rezoning to residential with a 6,500 square foot minimum is the first step towards the new project.

The planners will also hear the request of John Shuff to reclassify a five acre parcel of his 54 acre plot on the west side of North Midway Road.

Joint programs could help VMH

LIVERMORE - Two joint action programs to reduce costs and increase efficiency are under way and several others are in the planning stages at Valley Memorial Hospital and four other hospitals in the Southern Alameda County Hospital Association.

The other hospitals which joined with VMH more than a year ago in an efficiency project are Washington, St. Rose, Eden and San Leandro Memorial.

A biomedical engineering program which started last fall lowers hospital costs while improving patient safety. A biomedical engineer and technician keep in perfect shape electro-surgical units and special monitoring equipment such as cardiac monitoring systems, emergency resuscitation equipment and fetal monitors. The team is hired jointly by the five hospitals. Without the sharing, each hospital would need to hire the experts as consultants, paying a much higher fee.

The importance of biomedical engineering has been emphasized by the Joint Commission of Accreditation of Hospitals, which provides hospital inspections. Also the Federal Occupational Safety and Health Act (OSHA) requires increased equipment inspections and safety.

Three of the cooperating hospitals — VMH, St. Rose and Washington — have joined together in a new credit and collection program. Two months ago, the hospitals contracted with two agencies for a collection service for overdue bills. The new program is expected to save each hospital about 10 per cent on collection costs.

The next undertaking will be self-insured Workmen's Compensation Insurance. After approval from all five hospital boards, the new plan can be started in January when present contracts expire. The self-insurance is expected to save VMH some $40,000 over an 18-month period.

A health benefits consultant is now developing a joint health insurance program for hospital employees. To save money through increased purchasing power, representatives from the five hospitals have been meeting and investigating group purchasing possibilities. Purchasing agents, pharmacists, food service managers and medical records administrators are developing plans for shared services.

Other areas of possible cooperation include patient care evaluation, respiratory therapy, planning, inservice education programs and community health education.

Sic 'em, Tigers

Mike Zampa

It's hard to comment on the merits or demerits of Little League Baseball without pontificating. Backers equate it with mother and John Wayne as fixtures of American goodness. Critics view it as a demonic plague requiring the rites of exorcism.

Kids used to hold the only level-headed notions of the sport, but even they have been infected by our most emotionally-charged institution.

This year the "letters of outrage" department includes missives from indignant 12-year olds. One scribbled a plea to help rid his township of a manager whose philosophy came from the book "Play It My Way" by Ghengis Khan.

For years, thank heavens, youngsters were immune to the lunacies of adults who pretended to be Connie Mack reincarnate. They were too busy throwing rocks at the third baseman, or sticking out tongues at girls in the bleachers. They never realized their adult leadership came from a bunch of jerks.

If a kid could survive falls from bicycles and monkey bars, it sure wasn't going to bruise him if he fell out of the coach's good grace.

And if the adults wanted to curse and bicker over some infinitesimal rule, well, what the hell. Who could read a rule book anyway?

Unfortunately, the youngsters' immunity to all of this has worn thin. They're learning younger these days. Maturing sooner. Teenagers get ulcers. Tots display the symptoms of neuroses. Those beautifully uncluttered minds are being exposed to pressures incomprehensible in another age.

Suddenly, the little leaguers discover that the coach is an ogre in flannel. The word "Tigers" across his chest becomes a clue to the man's temper more than a team symbol. When the kids begin mailing S.O.S. notes, crying that the men are undermining their game, the danger must be at hand.

But there it is again. More ominous verbiage being banded about over a child's game. It begins to sound like the script for a disaster movie. The writer picks his brain for doomsday dialogue. The subject matter, however, isn't heavy enough to bear the weight of the words.

Step back from the heat of debate and view little league from a cool perspective, and the sight is comical.

On one end of the spectrum are boosters who point to the little league credo: "Character, Loyalty, Courage."

Over there are the critics, leaning on experts like Freud and Casey Stengel to prove that little league is the chief cause of mental illness.

How in hell does any of it relate to baseball?

A coach refuses to play a catcher because he's left-handed, and the kid breaks into tears. His father writes the newspaper calling this the greatest tragedy in the boy's life. His teammates witness the whole scene and scrunch up their noses in puzzlement.

That's building character?

Robin Roberts, former 20-game winner for the Philadelphia Phillies, and an avowed little league opponent, takes up a full page in Newsweek to point out that the sport forces families to eat late dinners.

We should scrap a half-century old institution for that?

Perhaps the zealots from both directions should be locked on a bus with a pee wee team, and shipped out for a barnstorm tour of the country. The exhibitions would be played at 3 p.m. so Robin Roberts could get to the table on time.

When the troupe returned, pro and con forces could then sit down and rationally plot out a future for little league.

No matter which side of the outfield fence you're sitting on, it's obvious that a redirection is necessary.

Forget that all the newsletters and programs contain promises of good faith and sportsmanship in little league. The sore heads and bloated egos can't be filtered out. You can bet that somewhere there's a coach fining 10-year olds 10 cents for missing the cutoff man. And in the bleachers behind him is a mother cursing through a bullhorn.

The "win at all costs" syndrome is being shoved down the kids' throats right from the top. They kicked out the Taiwan team from the Little League World Series because it always won. Character? Loyalty? Courage?

They can't even fool the youngsters with that anymore.

Little League officials ought to discard the notion that their institution has replaced the Marine Corps as America's bulwark of men. Both outfits carry that inflated notion and that's why they're open to pot shots. That's also why they're so stubbornly opposed to change.

Standard procedure now is to prioritize a bunch of necessary reforms for little league. Stamp them with official backing of psychiatrists, and perhaps a couple of former major leaguers who are jealous because they spent childhoods in a coal mine. Then insist that society as we know it is doomed unless the entire sweeping reform package is not immediately made a constitutional amendment.

Little League will counter by holding a rally at home plate in Williamsport, Pa. George Wallace will be rolled out of the dugout with red, white and blue bunting on his wheel chair. Miss America will appear in shin guards and a chest protector, a sparkler poked into the webbing of her fielder's mitt.

A local minister will deliver an incantation that closes with the woody power of the Almighty. America will be safe for freedom, liberty, and the District 88 pony division minor league all-star playoffs.

Unless all the hard-liners lighten up, Little League will wind up on its same bumpy course.

Until they do, I'm going to join Robin for dessert.

Long-Eyler win in Livermore net

STEVE WILLIFORD REACHES FOR FOREHAND IN LIVERMORE MIXED DOUBLES HANDICAP

He and partner Stephanie Schall competed in third flight at Granada courts

Pat Long and Bob Eyler combined for 20 points, four more than a trio of teams bunched in second place, to win the first flight of the Livermore Tennis Club's mixed doubles handicap tournament yesterday at Granada High School.

The one-day tournament consisted of five flights, arranged according to seedings. Each team played ten games, with point totals determined by the various handicaps.

Long and Eyler moved away from a field which included teams of Mike and Sandy McCracken, Paul Zarcone and Janet Rinta, and Bob and Eva Leong. Those three teams shared second place with 16 points each.

Flight two went to Ron Sisemore and Suzanne Wirsching, who totaled 22 points to defeat Sinclair-Sinclair, runners-up with 19.

The day's hottest competition took place in the third flight, where two teams tied for first with 16 points. In a five-game playoff, however, Cathy Corallo and Glen Wilhite needed only four to dispose of Doug Long and Mary Haussmann, 3-1. The team of Schall and Schall came close, but settled for third with 15 points.

Dick and Pat Andersen scored the clearest victory of the day, as they piled up 28 points en route to their conquest of the fourth flight. Corallo and Corallo were second with 22, and Cariss and Cariss were third with 18.

Fred and Cathy Scholl took the fifth flight, scoring 23 points to easily outdistance Ron Musket and Susanne Bauer, second with 18.

Shaw captures his third gold at Cali

CALI, Colombia (AP) — Tim Shaw, the peerless freestyler from Long Beach, Calif., grabbed his third gold medal of the II World Aquatics Championships and the East German women shattered the world record in the 400-meter freestyle relay with a clocking of 3:49.37 Saturday night.

Shaw, world recordholder in the 1,500 with a time of 15:20.91, wasn't pressed in recording a winning time of 15:28.92.

The East Germans chipped more than two seconds off the old mark of 3:51.99 set by an American foursome in 1974. An American team was second in 3:50.74, also under the previous world record, and thus an American national record. Canada was third in 3:53.37, also a national record.

The 17-year old Shaw, with victories in the 200 and 400 freestyle here, set a meet record here in beating Brian Goodell of Mission Viejo, Calif., who was second in 15:39.00.

Third place was taken by David Paker of Great Britain in 15:58.21.

Earlier in the day the United States got another gold medal in synchronized swimming from two Californians.

Robin Curren of Santa Clara and Amanda Norrish of San Jose received 129,433 points, giving the Americans their second gold medal in synchronized swimming. A day earlier, Gail Buzonas of Santa Clara won the solo synchronized swimming competition.

Finishing second Saturday were the Canadian duo of Laura Wilkin and Carol Stuart with 127,733 points. The bronze medal for third place went to the Japanese twosome of Yasuko Fujiwara and Masako Fujiwara with 126,0995.

As the night's swimming finals got under way, Rosemarie Kother, the world recordholder from East Germany, easily won the 200-meter women's butterfly in near-record time.

Miss Kother, whose world record clocking is 2:13.76, was timed in 2:13.82. Valerie Lee of Mission Viejo, Calif., was second in 2:14.89 for an American national record, and Gabriele Wuschek of East Germany was third in 2:15.96.

Wolves struggle past CP scrubs

San Ramon High won a sudden-death decision from College Park's junior varsity last week in summer league basketball, 37-35.

The Wolves, who led by 14 points at halftime, were out-scored, 23-13 in the second half to force the extra seconds.

Ed Aitken paced San Ramon with 12 points, while teammates Dave Tricaso and Phil Wittz added seven apiece.

College Park's Darrell Goodson poured in a game-high 16 points.

Amador Valley bounced California, 57-29, as summer scoring leader Mike Hill again led the offense.

Hill scored 12 points for the Dons, followed by Mark Clark's 10.

Jim Lucas of California had seven points.

Dublin ran into the Amador alumni team and was bombed, 80-34.

Mike Harris and Mike Santos propped up the Gael offense with eight points each. Ed LaPerle and Mike Beerman each scored six.

Andy Finn led the alumni with 18 points. Phil Hansen had 16 and Jeff Hine, 14.

Pleasanton Soxers top Milpitas, 8-3

Pleasanton's major league Bobby Sox softball all-stars scored five runs in the fourth inning yesterday and went on to defeat Milpitas, 8-3, to open the annual tournament at Washington Manor Park in San Leandro.

Pleasanton faces the winner of yesterday's Livermore-Newark contest tonight at 8. Milpitas grabbed a quick 2-0 lead in the first inning, but Pleasanton tied it in the bottom of the third with its own.

Susan Vaughn led off with a walk, and scored all the way from first on a sacrifice fly by Chris Brittain, as the Newark fielders kicked the ball around.

Janie Kunz followed with a single but was thrown out attempting to steal second. That brought up Carolyn Hill, who kept the rally alive with another base hit. Lisa Leach did the same, and Suzanne Sabal walked to load the bases.

Lynn Fruchtenicht, who pitched the entire game for Pleasanton, then drew a walk to score Hill.

The P-towners' big rally began with successive bases on balls to Carrie McNatt and Vaughn. Brittain reached on a single, loading the bases.

Kunz then powered a triple, scoring three runs. She came home when Hill jolted a double, and Hill scored on a subsequent overthrow.

Garbagemen take out Naz with big first

Livermore-Dublin Disposal scored eight times in the first inning of its game with Nazarene Church last week in the Livermore Slow-Pitch Softball League, and went on to win, 12-9.

Gary Armosino started the rally with a leadoff single, and climaxed it with a three-run home run as the 11th batter in the inning.

Joe Vallergera crashed a two-run homer in that same inning, and Don Lavagetto singled home two runs.

Kieth Dayton belted a two-run homer in the second inning for the winners. Dayton and Bob Caldera drove in other runs in the fifth inning.

Neal Lann's double chased home two runs for Nazarene in a four-run sixth inning. Jim Burns tripled home a run in the seventh.

Blair Foods bounced Amfac, 16-10, though the losers protested the contest over an alleged uniform infraction.

Foreman to open gym tomorrow

Invitations were in the mail last week for the opening of George Foreman's storefront gym in Livermore tomorrow afternoon.

The onetime heavyweight champion begins a new chapter in his explosive career at the Livermore Shopping Center on Rincon Ave. Training facilities have been set up in what was once a pleasure boat showroom.

A boxing ring sits in the middle of the spacious quarters. Along one of the wood-paneled walls are stations for speed and heavy punching bags. In an adjoining room workmen were busy Friday framing George's dressing area.

Since gaining the heavyweight championship with a stunning knockout of Joe Frazier two years ago, Foreman has never had a permanent headquarters. He has trained mostly at the Alameda County Fairgrounds in Pleasanton, but also in Houston, New York City, and just about anywhere else where airplanes land.

After gaining the title, George purchased a home on a secluded land parcel along Mines Road in Livermore. But it has always been a part-time residence.

The new store front training facility sinks George's roots into the town more firmly than ever before.

Foreman lived in Pleasanton for part of his youth at the Camp Parks Job Corps Center. It was there he launched a boxing career that blossomed with an Olympic gold medal at Mexico City in 1968.

After a carefully mapped beginning as a professional, George shocked the world in 1973 by pummeling Frazier in Caracas, Venezuela.

For subsequent bouts he established temporary training headquarters in the Mineral and Gem exhibit hall on the Pleasanton fairgrounds.

The new facility, surrounded by a super market, drug store and restaurant, and directly across from a commercial health club, means he will no longer be at the mercy of the fair schedule.

Construction of the boxing gym commenced early in the summer. It was almost snagged by the city bureaucracy, which questioned whether or not the world's leading heavyweight contender belonged in a neighborhood shopping mall.

By then, construction was well along at the training site. Eventually the city relented, saving itself the embarrassment of turning out Livermore's most famous citizen since Max Baer, one who had contributed hundreds of dollars to local youth groups.

Now Foreman has a facility to prepare in, but no one to prepare for. He was rumored weeks ago to be near signing with Southern California heavyweight Pedro Lovell.

Foreman's manager, Leroy Jackson, was unavailable for comment on the former champion's immediate fight plans.

Codioli Ford wins behind Jim Boswell

Codioli Ford's Jim Boswell stopped Chubb Insurance on nine hits Tuesday, insuring a 5-3 victory in Livermore Slow Pitch Softball.

Boswell retired the first 10 Chubb batters in the game, before yielding a hit, and eventually the first run, in the last of the fourth inning.

By then he had been staked to a 4-0 lead. Dennis Murphy's run-scoring double, and a solo home run by Fred Cariss put two Codioli runs on the board in the first inning. In the third, Al Weber singled home a run, and Ed Froover fetched the other with a sacrifice fly.

Bob Hansen provided the final run in the top of the fourth inning with leadoff home run.

Chubb drove in a run for the losers with a fourth-inning double. Jeff Farado's single in the fifth inning scored two more.

Team Turkey fell to Hexel, 5-1, as Ray Anaya pitched an eight-hitter. The only Turkey run came in the fifth inning on Lee Amos' two-out single with runners at first and second.

Ed Alexander put Hexel up, 3-0 in the second inning when he doubled home two runs, later scoring on an error.

In the fifth inning, Toby Rien's sacrifice fly scored Dan Sheline for the winners, after Sheline had tripled. Doug Dickeson followed with a home run. Al Gariano pitched a 12-hitter for Kavanagh Liquors in blunting Livermore Station, 5-1. The winners had two first inning runs thanks to back-to-back doubles by Glen Fuller and Gerry Girard. Fuller and Girard cracked consecutive home runs in the third inning Fuller's sacrifice fly scored Stan Peters in the seventh inning.

Cohn makes Nor Cal playoff cut

Jeff Hardy didn't "turn," and as a consequence Neil Cohn is moving on.

Cohn and Hardy were engaged in a sudden-death playoff to determine the final qualifier for the Northern California Junior Golf Association Championships, to be held at Lake Merced Country Club August 5-9.

Seventeen other golfers had qualified at the rustic Diablo Country Club Friday afternoon, and Cohn and Hardy found themselves battling 110-degree heat, as well as each other, for the 18th spot.

Hardy and Cohn checked in at nine over par 80 for the day, as Lake Chabot's Steven Fluke took medalist honors with a 71.

Both Cohn and Hardy parred the first hole of their playoff, with Cohn dropping a pressure-packed four-footer. Hardy's attempt at a birdie rolled to the lip of the cup but refused to fall.

On the second hole, a 365-yard par four, Cohn calmly rapped his tee shot 230 yards, right up the middle. Then Hardy, who held a great distance advantage, sprayed his drive over a boundary fence, which cost him two strokes and a trip to Lake Merced.

"I just didn't turn," an obviously dejected Hardy commented. "I was so worried about hooking it out of bounds to the left, I let the ball get away from me."

After Hardy had pounded another drive 275 yards, this time in bounds, he appeared to have a glimmer of hope when Cohn lashed a six iron over the rock-hard green.

But this was just not Hardy's hole, and he too flew his shot over the green. "That's OK," said Cohn, trying to console Hardy. "You'll make it as first alternate."

It wasn't a good day for valley golfers in general, as four local aspirants failed to qualify over the hilly Diablo course.

A 42 on the back nine cost Chris Cantalini a chance to advance, as he totaled 82. Livermore's Jeff Smith couldn't get anything started, and finished at 85.

Allen Aldrich of Pleasanton nearly shot the temperature, carding a 93. And it was such a bad day for Neil Zurakowski, he didn't bother to turn in a scorecard. — Steve Mona

Search for uranium ore funded by ERDA grant

The Energy Research and Development Administration (ERDA) has awarded a contract to IRT Corporation of San Diego to develop a system to speed up the search for uranium.

The Lawrence Livermore

Laboratory is involved in several programs to enrich uranium — i.e., to separate uranium-235 from uranium-238.

IRT's $320,000 project represents a portion of ERDA's $5.7 million support during the last fiscal year for its National Uranium Resource Evaluation (NURE) program.

The NURE program is designed to provide better information for assessing the nation's uranium resources and identifying areas favorable for uranium occurrences. It also provides this information to private industry in order to help meet the increasing need for nuclear fuel. The IRT contract calls for the design, fabrication and testing of a prototype California-252 based borehole logging system, which will provide greater sensitivity to detecting uranium ores than existing methods.

The new detection system should speed evaluation of uranium deposits by eliminating the lengthy process required by existing mining and exploration methods, which detect uranium around the borehole by inference from geologic features and secondary characteristics. The new system is intended to detect uranium directly.

Livermore man's condition listed as satisfactory

LIVERMORE — Keith Richardson, 18, of 1125 Xavier Way, was reported to be in satisfactory condition authorities at Valley Memorial Hospital by following a single automobile accident on Bluebell Drive last week.

Richardson was discovered unconscious at 4:30 a.m. July 16 in his car, which had struck three fence posts and came to rest against the base of a street light, according to police reports.

He was suffering from extensive multiple facial lacerations, the police report indicated.

The solo accident occurred on Bluebell Drive just south on Buckskin Road.

San Ramon woman still missing

LEWISTON, TRINITY COUNTY — There are "still no developments" in the search for a missing San Ramon woman who disappeared from her family's Trinity County trailer home near here July 11.

A two day search by a 40-man posse produced "no clues" in the search for Margie Woodmansee, 35, according to undersheriff Ted Laag. Woodmansee apparently walked away from the family's vacation home sometime July 11.

Sheriff's deputies have ruled out foul play and suicide, according to Laag, but are stuck with "no leads and no information."

Her husband Tom and their three children have returned to the family's San Ramon home.

chance to make suggestions about the neighborhood park that will be going in some day, just off Murietta Boulevard on Olivina. This summer, the Livermore Area Recreation and Park District (LARP) will be putting in two acres of community vegetable-garden plots on part of the land. They want your approval of their plans — at 7 p.m. Tuesday.

They'll even bring the meeting to you. It will be at Olivina and Kinglet Avenues. The whole LARP board is expected to be there, along with staff members who are bringing plans and sketches. Discussion of the park is last on a very brief agenda which includes call to order, roll call and approval of a suggestion to support the Livermore Unified School District in campaigning for favorable legislation.

Suspected thief nabbed

LIVERMORE — Police arrested an 18-year-old Redding youth on charges of possession of a stolen car, Wednesday, after he was discovered sleeping in the car near Springtown Boulevard. Officers were first alerted by an unidentified animal control officer who told them the young man was asleep in the dark green, 1969 Jeep as it was parked in some tall grass at the north end of a field near Springtown.

The youth identified himself as Richard R. Larsen of Redding, and told patrolman Lou Andrade that he usually parks outside city limits to sleep.

The Jeep was full of food and camping equipment, Andrade noted, and the ignition appeared to have been "hot wired."

Larsen told Andrade that the Jeep, with "MV Nursery Richmond" emblazoned on its side, belonged to the youth's boss.

A routine check, however, listed it as stolen from Red Bluff.

Larsen was returned to Red Bluff "for prosecution in this case," police said.

For want of key — $2,600

SAN RAMON — Because his house guest didn't have a key, Robert Kahl left his door unlocked Wednesday — and it cost him $2,600, according to Contra Costa County sheriffs. Kahl told police burglars entered his Intech Avenue home and stole a pistol, a $2,000 wedding ring set and other jewelry from a locked filing cabinet in his garage.

Oldest profession comes out of the closet in France

By Rosette Hargrove

PARIS — (NEA) — By seeking sanctuary in the churches of several cities recently, prostitutes ("filles de joie" or joy girls, as they are known to the French) resorted to a medieval custom.

One of the last minorities to raise the red flag of revolution is the oldest profession. They have also raised a problem for which there seems to be no solution. The closing of brothels in France back in 1946 certainly has not prevented prostitutes from pursuing business as usual. They have only become more evident. Illogically, prostitution is legal in France but soliciting and pimping are not.

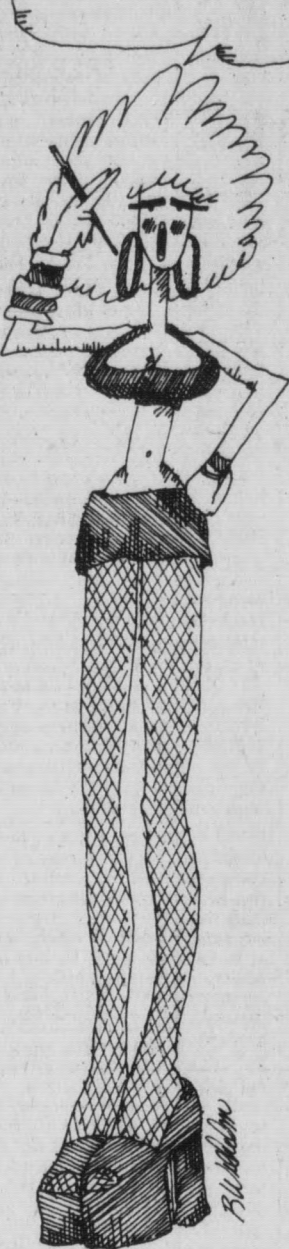

Ulla, the "Passionaria" of Lyons where the revolt against police authority began, stated very clearly what she and her sisters were fighting for. All want to be considered as exercising a profession as any other. The re-opening of brothels? "No," declared Ulla, "no brothels, no Eros Centers, as in some European countries. We want to put an end to the hypocritical attitude of the world around us."

That a prostitute should aspire to these things may seem abnormal to conventional thinking. But the "profession" remains a problem. And while sociologists point out that the majority have freely adopted this profession, it is all a question of money. Barbara, a handsome brunette, explained: "Me, with the money I make I buy respectability. My two children are brought up like any other middle class children. It's nobody's business how I earn it."

The number of "professionals" in France is variously estimated at 13,000 to 16,000, with 5,000 in Paris. According to police records, there are around 700 newcomers every year with the same number of dropouts. Two factors are responsible for this: a more active police force and the evolution of the permissive society. Added to which must be considered the "occasional" prostitutes, part-time operators out for money to pay the rent or buy a fur coat.

In fact, what all prostitutes are seeking is a kind of emanper cent of professional prostitutes are completely free.

Still another important factor for Tonie and her friends is the health problem. They are in favor of strict regulations: regular medical control for all and penalties for those who default. This, they believe, would be one way to stem the wave of venereal disease which has increased in recent years.

The re-opening of brothels does not find favor with most prostitutes. This corresponds to a form of slavery and complete abjection, they say. "We want to be free to organize our life as we think fit. We should be allowed to work in studio apartments (right now a renter can be arrested for pimping if we are caught) or else authorize a list of hotels where we would be assured of the maximum of security."

There are also the fines and prison terms which the "joy girls" would like to see abolished. Some pay as much as $100 a day. As for prison, they point out that every citizen is free to use his or her body as he or she wishes and that they have neither stolen nor killed. They are even ready to pay income tax on their earnings, like any wage earner. They do not ask for special favors. Only the right to be considered honorable citizens.

In quite another strata are the call girls described in a biography just published on Madame Claude, the most famous madam in Paris. She believes that while her activities are held to be immoral, there was no hypocrisy and her callgirl business probably saved many marriages if only because an occasional ego-building fling is much less dangerous than keeping a mistress.

Today's loose moral standards rather shock Madame Claude who claims her establishment was patronized by all the Parisian elite. But she thinks today's permissive society is a threat to the oldest profession. "Soon prostitution will be killed by the pill," she says. "And when you put sex on the front page and make pornographic films readily available, it is stupid and sad."

"The language of love has become ugly and gross," concludes Madame Claude.

and the right to live like other women. They are ready to accept certain reforms. Tonie (short for Antoinette), another active militant in Paris, declares: "We are not against being registered and given a working permit. On the contrary. This would also simplify police records. We would also undertake to produce the working permits or salary slips of our husband or boy friend. It would thus be easy to smoke out the pimps and the women who work for them." According to Tonie, 80

"People serving people"

Rarely in today's modern mechanized world of supersonic jets, flights to the moon, giant supermarkets and rapid transits do you find a service oriented company large enough to provide all essential services yet be totally devoted to providing you, the consumer with the utmost in service. Such a company exists today in the Real Estate Industry. In 1965 a new star was born in real estate when VALLEY REALTY opened its first office in Dublin, California. What was to take place in the ensuing years was beyond its founders wildest dreams.
